

WHY ARE DOCTORS STRIKING?

Junior doctors and consultants from across England are fighting to be valued and paid their worth.

15 years of substantial pay erosion has brought us to this point.

Further industrial action could be avoided by the Government coming to the table for meaningful discussions.

The BMA has been asking for months for negotiations to reopen and for the Government to put an offer on the table. Both patients and doctors want the Government to work WITH us to bring an end to industrial action.

If we want a health service fit for tomorrow, doctors must be properly valued today.

Is your doctor heading Down Under?

While waiting lists reach record highs, OECD data shows around 13,000 British trained doctors are working outside the UK, many in Australia. At the same time, we have more than 10,000 vacancies on home soil.
